

Visible Fictions - About Organisation

We are Visible Fictions, we're based in the city centre of Glasgow, and we create work for, with and by young people - and we tour across the world, with theatre productions, participation projects, inspiring our participants and our audiences, wherever we go, and with whatever we do.

Each project has to raise the bar, and it's really important to us to enable young people and children to reach their full potential - and I think that is one of our main operating goals.

First and foremost, the children and young people have to get taken through a really high quality theatrical experience. Whether that be aiming towards producing a youth theatre show, or a DVD.

We really do place the experience of our audience first, and really the key questions that we ask are:

“What is our audience going to get from this?”

“Why would they want to see it?”

“Why would our participants want to engage in this particular project?”

“What are they going to get from it?”

And that question is always at the forefront of our mind, and I think when you see the levels of self-esteem and social skills, and sense of worth when a young person has connected to the company, not only through it's product, but through it's participation work or it's education work - I think that particular outcome for the work that we do is really invaluable, and one that I'm really proud of.
